Disappearing

by marc macdonald

They say nothing, but instead watch the birds and people hovering. Every day is an echo of the one before, and the weight of waiting has begun to show itself in the stature of the tiny man and his little old wife.

They are even smaller now than they were last week. Maybe this is their hope.

Available online at «http://fictionaut.com/stories/marc-macdonald/disappearing»
Copyright © 2008 marc macdonald. All rights reserved.