

A Little Wine (to put you in the idle reverie)

by Darryl Price

Amused yet? It doesn't matter and that doesn't mean anything. But eternity in hell is just another knife they use to keep you looking in the wrong direction. We can have fun. Please don't let them break your heart like that. They do their jobs because they no longer believe in small butterflies. Please don't wait to show up in your light. The wine tastes just as bitter as you think it must. But that doesn't make you any smarter. Please don't let them defuse you. Please don't let them make you miss the boat. Please don't let them push you into a lake. Please don't let them make you wait some more to feel everything. Please don't let them determine you. Please don't let them put you in a sentence you don't mean. Please don't let them turn off your good music. Don't let them make you a stranger, a shadow. Please don't let them put you in a wall, a well. You are not a brick, stone. Not another broken appliance. Wait for me. Don't let them convince you. Don't let them deny you. What are you doing? I saw the smile upon your face. You cannot lie to please me. Don't let them give you away. Please don't let them mistake you. Please don't let them saw off beauty. Please don't let them kill nakedness. Love is worth fighting for. Please don't ignore the moon's message tonight. Please don't let them prove hope wrong. Please don't let them disappear dreaming. Who cares? I think you know. Please don't let them sit with their mind's eyes closing. Please don't let them shoot wild flowers with an elephant gun. Please don't let them not even consider your pain. Don't let them turn the whole world into their personal departure lounge. It's not worth it. Please remain strong, don't let them ruin your party dress.

Please don't let them pour you all out. Don't let them stop you from getting on. Don't let them drive you away from yourself forever. Please don't let them speak to you like they are reading from a book. They don't know you. Please don't let them give you the wrong punchline just because your confusion is terribly funny to them. I don't like them. Never have. Please don't let them own your laughter or anything else having to do with your throat. It's your voice. Use it to be absolutely free. Or as Bob Dylan put it, "Too many people have died." Please don't let them get you to think about something else, something that doesn't matter. Don't let them turn this poem out of your memory. Please don't let them get your signature on their petition, to fine the sky for falling ill. Don't let them misunderstand every kind impulse you have made and acted upon. They will try. You must try harder. Please don't help them hide us.

Bonus poems:

This Beautiful Lie
by Darryl Price

In Memory of Julie Straub tells us everything we need to know about each other for now. It's a whole lot of fun. I didn't say I didn't like it though. I did. Jesus, my grammar is terrible today.

This beautiful lie is better than the crowd of thoughts that have lately been crazily crossing my mind like a lovely flowing cacophony of wild animals. Hear them roar. I just wanted out of this Thanksgiving Day maze of poor choices by any means necessary. It was quite nice in the new beginning because we were having a so much fun & adventure together, weren't we? But it's become more like looking through a window at everything there constantly changing to the same thing. There goes another loose leaf. Chewed up by another wind.

Should we make a documentary?
This rough around the edges pretty lie is broke on an ordinary rock and the look of it suits it just fine. You and I have looked better. There was a happy you that wouldn't have stood for such a betrayal of the glorious heights reached. There was a sad me that would simply have said no, I would be doing this alone. Oh this beautiful lie was hard to resist at the time and I didn't try. But this beautiful lie lied to us all.

It made our hearts sink as one. I should have known better. I should have warned you.
Because you were my beautiful friend who hugged me without words getting in the way. This beautiful lie cost us our cup of beauty, our goodness and what light we ever possessed. This pale beautiful lie robbed us blind in broad daylight. But it made us laugh. I'll say that much for it. I'd do it again.

It kept us going to an unknown destination all through the night and into the next day and the next. The dozen or so years of each minute on this earth's quickly revolving door.

Crucial life or death decisions to be made for the jolly sake of those unfriendly others involved. Then it didn't. You were gone. I should have been holding your hand in mine like we had promised under the wailing guitars of the Velvet Underground. Poor Lou.
What about Nico, I can hear you say. Where are we going? You've seen it.
Tell me. I just don't know. I didn't want to go without you. And now I must. Goodbye doesn't even come close.

Am I breaking Down
by Darryl Price

or is it you and your friendly burning log fire desire? Love is an incidental stranger waiting with a small brown package in the alleyway just off any main street in your town. Someone knows what for. Pray it isn't you. Love is selling its bottled salvation potion like a phoney baloney shaman in a fabulous whipped turban and new long harvest wig. Love is making me feel like nothing explains anything to my satisfaction anymore. I mean what's going on here? Love loves to bring us together. But then so many small things happen to tear us apart. There is just no way for me to remain a sane sad purveyor of the poetic worlds when all there is misunderstands everything else that is not. Love sucker punches you in the philosophical gut like a low flying bird, loves to see you cry, to hear you scream. It might be me.

I mean I do sort of feel broken, I am more alone, here at the end, and I do not really like it, but I can stand it. Love is only one day to remember. I hate to tell you I told you so, but even the beautiful things can get squeezed to a plaster used up towel finish. Too sensitive?

Get down to it then. Love bludgeoned me, ripped me up, when I wasn't looking past its delightful storytelling. Dear God, I hope I'm not in love with you. Is that what this is? An apology? Please forgive me. Misguided?

Let's try not to make amends. Not now, when we're so close to forgetting the whole damned thing. I'm already way off course. Me and the leaves will be gone before you know it. I collect these poems only because I can see them when no one else seems to notice they are right there. Sorry about the ranting and raving.
Forget I said anything. I am happy to see myself out.

3 short poems by Darryl Price

I Wasn't Sure

I wasn't sure if I should climb into the red roses either, but gingerly we went, and the tiny yellow butterfly flew high away just as we got there.

We Decided

We decided to take the secret passageway, but then Margaret found a spider and ran home and told on all of us.

It Was Winter

It was Winter, and all the new snowflakes were acting like they didn't care about anyone or anything, as long as they could fall endlessly together.

