

There is a Sadness

by Darryl Price

now I cannot shake. I am only one person. There is a sadness I cannot understand. Fathom. Control. Manipulate. Detonate.

I used to kiss her tenderly. Do you think this sadness is wise to us? Don't point that gun at me! There is a sadness. There is another war. I am only one person. There is a sadness I cannot shake. Comes another nasty rain. I used to kiss her tenderly. There's a sadness walking through the gardens of the whole world now. I am only a person. There is a sadness on the window pane. I hear it knock.

I used to kiss her. The sun shone on her bare bottom. I don't understand. Is there a sadness now I cannot shake? I am only one person. There is a sadness in the mists over the river. The whole world is coagulating, in the quiet leaves, in the forgotten forests, trying to shrink itself in utter silence, too. I'm this person. I'm not that person. I used to kiss her tenderly. I am only one. There's a drab sadness like nothing I've ever felt before. A sadness like moonlight pulled down over our ears. A sadness like dark buildings.

Sadness as if I opened my eyes and felt a dagger put to my side. I used to kiss her tenderly. There is a sadness, but I suppose you've already heard too much about that yourself. A raging world, like nightly getting washed away with serious tears. She was more beautiful to me than God sitting in His sunsets having a long ice packed drink of mystery Coke. I used to kiss her on the inside leg of her journey. But now, now there is this sadness like we've all fallen asleep where we stand. I am only one person.

Like you I wish to see another day. There is a grey sadness now I cannot shake. I am only one person who doesn't matter. But I know there is a sadness like a plea for some better understanding between peoples everywhere. A sadness like little white carefree country flowers trying to grow inside a vast blue sky, but having a really hard time doing it. I used to kiss her mouth so tenderly. I am only here. This sadness is nothing short of disgusting. I cannot shake it. There is this sadness now fixed on destroying what heart I have left, with its propensity for starvation, and murder of true affection. I am only one person. Her eyes were soft to look at, to gaze in, to take on.

Now there is a sadness that puts all of my thoughts and dreams in a hospital sling. There is a sadness, but also a courage, like a bird I didn't know I had, singing in my tree, asking me to see new light as it flies to the north sea of my emotions. There is sadness, but a small hope also remains, determined to leap high and deep with joy.

First, an old dp poem:

We Wore Our Hair Long
by Darryl Price

You don't have to push back so hard. We wore our hair long.
We wanted the animals to trust us in their wild open spaces.
Everything will come undone. We wore our hair long because we wanted to

Be able to find our way home in the dark moonlight. It'll be All right. We wore our hair long because we walked among your tethered

Horses and they seemed to think it was the right thing to Do. You can't take these cosmic things too lightly. We wore our Hair long because there was no future left. And because the bullshit night

Was beginning to pile up and over our heads like an avalanche Of thick grey clouds. They offered us nothing, nothing in return for our broken

Hearts. This is the world, they said. We wore our hair long

In spite of robot armies with falling bombs tattooed on their metal Encased brains. You don't have to push. We wore our hair long Because we were so in love. It's as simple as that. We were Able to see all free creatures breathing in every blade of grass.

We

Wore our hair long to magnify their tears. You don't have to Push us so hard. We wanted the animals to not be afraid To let us touch them in our dreams. We wore our hair long to show

The ancient dragons that we still respected them. Put your arms around

Me now. We were deeply in love. We wore our hair long as Long as we were together. After that, the poems came on us like rain.

Bonus poems: 5 teeth set in a pumpkin's grinning mouth

Only My Hand
by Darryl Price

Now is so important to say I love you. To not choose hate or fear to rule us but impossible hope, even with our red eyes full of soft sorrow. I'm glad you're here with me. I am always with you. That is not just a nice little saying, it is the absolute truth of my being.
It is my choice. My freedom cast with true love and a small grin, but on purpose. This is no time to pretend our souls are not in any real mortal danger. The world has become a criminal enterprise.

As one people it's time to sing a song of endless courage together. For the whole bluegreen planet. For all size beings everywhere. From fizzy atoms and sparkling stardust cities to major elephant herds and graceful billowing whales, mountains in deep meditation and colorful coral reefs, to blowing birds and humming bees. We make up everything and everything makes up us. We belong together. And now is no time to trust the people with all the stupid guns aimed between the eyes of every citizen. We can't allow unnecessary violence to become the only street playing dialogue that's available to us. It isn't. Use the most universal languages to communicate, to find meaning again, and to remember ourselves: there's all kinds of cool, amazing music being made, and gut wrenching laughter to be had, and dance, dance, dance. You have the right to feel a joyful happiness. Ironically, that also means right now we must fight, for a visible justice for all, with the one precious thing we've always had, our lives with each other. I like you. I want you to know that no matter what happens, it's true. dp

I'm Floating
by Darryl Price

I have no idea how I got here. I don't mean here. I mean here. Where I'm floating in helpless disappointment once again. The beautiful world below me is full of strange people I'll never know, I'll never say hello to. They don't seem to see me floating right over their heads in my little poetry bus. Keeping it simple though, I'm floating, but it could be walking on rain water as much as standing up flying through air like a vacuum cleaner.. It doesn't feel too bad. I'm floating just like a ghost. I'm floating, but it's me that's feeling gone down the rabbit hole. I have no idea how I'm floating when I should be falling into a deeper sleep. I'm floating in the empty fireplace. I'm floating in the river's brown eyes, banging my head against the exposed roots, whistling for an end to all this entrenched ancient madness, for it to go away, please. I'll float on. That's what I do for you. It's nothing you care about. That's who I am. Either the air will be slowly let out of me by the piratical rascal winds or quickly punctured out on the horns of a curious deer like creature made of glow in the dark leaves. I'm floating in my soul.

I Will Return to the Sea
by Darryl Price

" Some dance to remember. Some dance to forget."--The Eagles my heart, but you may not want to participate. I get that. I will return to the sea, my pockets full of the heavy stones you piled there with indifference. I'll return to the sea, first as blue foam then as green light then as some new thing weighed down by its own drinking weightlessness. Cracking skies will continue to chip their way into the world, while clouds mushroom up and down the coasts, opening new night like a secret bottle of wine shared with someone you love. It doesn't make it any less true. To the sea I'll return in my lover's shirt to the wreckage, the graveyard below all feelings and any thoughts of growing feelings among the seaweed. I will return to the sea shivering and turning to sand. But I will not stay there for you. This you must allow me to say, as I rise from the dark stairs of glowing stars to become dry again. And even though we are still here the stars do not look the same to me. I took your advice and met the sea on its own terms, the sea refused to tender my offer with anything more than cheekbones.

Please Don't Ruin This Poem
by Darryl Price

for me. I'm sorry it's not what you wanted. You don't have to be unkind.
Don't ruin it. Take it easy.
It's not what you want.
But you withheld the truth from your kiss. You wanted me to watch the betrayal like it was a soap job. You didn't have to be so unkind. Don't ruin this. He was the same sideways as frontways, so there was no real point in the window being cross-haired for my sake. You looked remarkably unsuited for each other, except as an excuse to rut around in the dirt and be pinned to pleasure like a dead butterfly. So

please don't ruin this poem for me on my account.

It's not what you want to do. Although the unkindness is something you gladly chose as a weapon, I choose poetry--I guess we're both wrong when it comes to love. A beautiful thing dies when there is no compromise, so as far as that is concerned it's already ruined. The unkindness you can keep.

