

Burial of the Dead

by Gary Hardaway

No canopic jars and fine Egyptian cotton.
No Viking sendoff, my corpse aflame within a ship upon the sea, for my carbon footprint is quite sooty enough already.

No cremation with its monoxide and dioxide.
No rouge and best suit, veins filled to almost bursting with chemicals, no.

Let me serve instead, cadaverous, to teach the youngsters what a life of genteel abuse of organs looks like then feed me to the worms and compost pile once my sentence of consciousness is served.
