

Erasure

by Gary Hardaway

We alone see our beauty.
All else is unmoved
and relentless in its indifference.

We alone pity us and the pity is that that is not enough to shelter us from our time's end.

What we imagine is irrelevant as the bits that spun us into consciousness accelerate and scatter.

