

Filter

by Gary Hardaway

The brain taints everything it brings to us with its limited apparatus, its precepts, all the things it thinks it knows.

It is the ever-unreliable narrator of events it sorts and remembers for you, for it. Its orthodoxies make a complex construct of pure distraction from the world as it really is. One must trick it with cameras and equations into knowing much of anything at all.

