

How the Body Prepares Itself

by Gary Hardaway

My death is close enough now that it corrupts the smells and flavors of the world and plants its swollen face at the edge of every view and vista.

So this is how the body prepares itself to leave—by spoiling the here and now with chronic ill at ease.

