

So I Wrote Thirty Poems in Thirty Days And I'm Still Not Sure If I Learned Anything Except How To Write Really Goddamn Fast

by Kirsty Logan

they say

learn the names of things make up your mind
create a new language with the same letters

they say

write constantly, your soul is built with words write rarely, but mean it

they say

read more, consume stacks as high as your hips read less, be selective, only in your genre, only outside your genre

they say

attain quickly
keep striving
paper your walls with rejections slips

don't forget to network don't forget to get down on your knees don't forget to call them friends
be accepted
be accepted

they say
only when your name is written do you become real

