ancients

by Kitty Boots

it would do you well to honor your ancestors, their blood flows through your veins courage, pride, some shame and a violent life, survival, told around smoky, peaty fires rheumy eyes wink, gnarled hands pantomime starving cattle gather in the room maybe a calf or two will survive to replenish the herd, maybe not lives conceived in later winter months have a better chance warmth, budding trees, the greening of the plains, it will come