

Vesper

by Philip F. Clark

I never took your body for granted.
Now as it is constantly missed, it at times appears, at rest in the room; sun-muscled and warm, configured by my stray illumined thoughts of how a body calls in the dark where absence has its harbor.

