Human Spirit - a poem

by Alim Ramji

A small pocket, of static matter wakes from the sleep of the immobile.

> Hidden within a lattice, of nerve and organ, it feels for an exit.

Scraping the edges of a fluid maze, it collides with others, like itself. forming an identity of impression and necessity.

Tap. Tap. Tap.

It begins to pulsate walking to the beat of success, dancing to the beat of failure.

Rising, it forms an ever growing thread, connecting what it can be, with what it was.

It enters a layer,

Available online at «http://fictionaut.com/stories/alim-ramji/human-spirit-a-

Copyright © 2009 Alim Ramji. All rights reserved.

saturated by a pseudo atmosphere, of ill-founded pleasures and distractions.
It forces itself to remain blind, but not sightless.

Emerging, it accelerates and laughs. Fueled by a powerful vigor, known only to beings who live in the world of zenith-denied peaks, and black swans.

It stops, when it reaches its home made of tessellation and kaleidoscopic infinities.

And it is here where it remains, its thread intact. Watching its host worlds below, walking in a life dictated by law.

Its host feels the thread and smiles, knowing full well what it means, to live in a world of tessellation and kaleidoscopic infinities.