

Woods

by Anthony Van Hart

We went to the woods to escape the failures that suck out your breath.

The ones that arch your back

And cave you in.

Surrounded by natural sirens and winded walls we skipped stones across the still waters.

Your index finger slid into my palm and with serenity all around, the internal shouting subsided.

