

Before She Gets into the Car

by Beate Sigriddaughter

Before she gets into the car, they say how much they will miss each other, and they know they probably won't. They want to hear it, though.

He stands and waves until she turns the corner. His white shirt gleams in morning light.

