

Augustinian Prayer Sonnet

by Bill Yarrow

Studios, yes, but hardly smart, her breasts were larger than her heart He kissed her tits and thought of art—Memling, Cressida, Jean-Paul Sartre, of marriages which fall apart when whores are put before Descartes, of guilt which stains but does not smart, of sad bullseyes that long for darts, and so he took her bra apart and took her tits into his heart, into his mouth, into his art, the taste less sweet than it was tart, an act more foolish than was smart which Christ had warned him from the start
