El Desdichado by Nerval

by Bill Yarrow

I am twilight's pissoir, the orphan's inclination. My star is dead; my constellation crushed. The Prince of Aquitaine has fallen and cannot rise. I am the shadow of waxwing slain.

In the tomb, in the outré tombe, I see the Sea of Capri, the Hearse of Merci, La Lune de Pantoum, La Place du Caprice. Désolé! Désolé! Où le vinaigre et le vin sont un.

I am naked and red, cheri. Give me back my color and my clothes. Give me back my singularity, my tristesse, my photo ID.

She sits in a gondola and burnishes her arms. She puts the piquant radish in her mouth. She takes a loofa and wipes the rainbow from her neck.