

Song of Unself

by Bill Yarrow

I cerebrate myself and singe myself and what you illume, I refuse for every good Adam betrothed to you will to me betray

I chafe and incite my soul I bake and chafe in my disease my speech, every item of tongue foams in this soil-free dust

earth's parents ... whose parents ... arrrrggghhh ... I now sixty-seven sixty-eight, sixty-nine years chagrin besmeares me, increases till death, old shoals in obeisance nothing suffices as harbor but a permit to claw at every yawing chasm exuberance is beauty ... lesion of enthusiasm
