

shakey

by bl pawelek

I took the running jump from the bright angel cliff into the void of grey snow blindness. The future's last time atom dropped at the same speed, and I felt the angels sing. Their cold breath rolled down my back and stopped me a moment. And then they let me go.

You held my hand when I hit the ground and told me the shakes would start soon.

