fictionaut A literary community for adventurous readers & writers.

it snows by Bud Smith

so warm ... rolling stones, hot rocks: side one this heart of stone my girl came home with a green suitcase travel record player we set it up in the pink room next to the desk where I write and she dug around came back with pinot noir her eyes were like little fires I leaned back in the chair that I found in the garbage cracked all my knuckles except for the broken one and said, "we'll still be here when the sun comes up, so, take a seat" "don't get comfortable," she cooed, "though life is long." "It's a trick." "yup, it is." the red chair wrapped her up the radiator sang out I popped open the wine with a Nike shoelace a trick I learned on the internet she pulled out her paints one by one by one by one Available online at «http://fictionaut.com/stories/bud-smith/it-snows» Copyright © 2013 Bud Smith. All rights reserved.

then revealed a canvas hidden behind the bookcase "think I'll paint over this one" "don't do that" "then buy it from me." "I'm broke." "I'll take a million bucks" she filled my coffee cup with wine or blood or crushed cherries or something I worked a rewrite over hunting typos as she sang let's spend the night together neighbor knocking on the door my foot stomping on the floor "ignore the world, baby thursday nights are for you and me" "I know that," she said, pushing her long hair out of her eyes right as Ruby Tuesday came on we noticed that age old thing all our teeth purple paint all over the records my fingers hurting from bad typing she opened up the window and we climbed out onto the shaky fire escape and watched the snow falling on 173rd street.

3

 \sim