

Away

by Charlotte Hamrick

Bare branches against grey sky.
A brittle wind blows your cold breath

and I don't miss it.
And I do miss it.

Curled up on the sofa,
face to the wall eyes squeezed tight

sleeping away the remembering of all the times I didn't try.

