

Floating Away

by Christian Bell

She walked by the bathroom again and, this time, without thinking, walked in, opened the medicine cabinet, took and swallowed a pill. She avoided the mirror. I can be two people at once, she told herself, as she walked out the front door, the pill inside her. Soon, she will turn to liquid, that other person, the world floating away.

