

Accepting New Patients

by Darryl Price

You've had some truly awful shit pumped into your brains for years at a time now. The practice started a long time ago. It's not always your fault. The only lasting way to get it out of your head is to go and figure out exactly where it's coming from and what it means and reject it wholeheartedly on purpose.

It has to be your freedom of choice and your freedom of expression. Trust yourself. You already know the difference. No one can do it for you. Music can help, learn to listen, think for yourself, but it is never on one side, so be careful. Once you have touched base with your own deepest feelings remember to have compassion for any others who might not be so lucky. Nobody wins a war entirely. No one gets out unscathed, but everyone here has a poet for a friend. Use that cursed blessing to your advantage. The important thing now is to not let anyone put live ideas into your head that you don't personally approve of having, no matter how persuasive they are sounding in their argument. Because you are you, You are not a dumping ground for someone's anger or hatred. You are a human person continuing to grow as a human being into a human being.

That Bowling for Rain Feeling by Darryl Price You have come home to me like little wooden boats quietly sloshing towards my own light among the piers, thank you so very much for your faith in unseen things, but you have not the true character of the one I was seeking-out by dream tom-tom tonight.
You, all you kids, with your ripe eyeballs still clinging to the vine, remind me of cellophane detective agency children, all colorfully garbed and hungry for the riddle of the twisted truth to be solved with a snap, snap, snap of a chubby chipped thumbnail and forefinger making a triangle sound in the modern musical winds. Still, as my honored guests, you are hereby certainly most welcomed to enter peacefully my own humming and able abode. I'm grateful for your presences tonight, truly I am. Truth is I was feeling a bit alone just now anyways. Perhaps that's the funny feeling signal you somehow read in my rising smoke rings then from so very far away? It's funny how a pipe will do just as easily as a good old fire to get the message sent across sometimes, if the writing's clear enough I suppose. But now back to the basic business at hand. This is mine to give, and so will I do it. Enter. Enter. Something with a meaning just for us has brought us to our present moment together and I'm just as curious a frog as the next to jump in and give it a proper name, aren't you? There are particular and ancient sounds we could use to stir the senses alive that have been spoken or sung many times over and by better poets than all of us put together I'm guessing, but we might as well be wise to wait and see if we are to be given that one we haven't heard from before, between any of us that is, especially for the new found circumstances of our being together like this, huh? I always find these things have their own schedules to land on. It does absolutely no good not to be generous in any case, and kindness is at all times and in all places the best key kept on the ready by the front door for just such magical purposes.

Tonight we sing what it means to dance! We dance what it means to sing! And if we're lucky we'll give the world its brand new flowers in time for a little more morning rain and afternoon sun. Just in time for making some jolly good tea. Eh, what? Oh that, that's just me sitting in my chair in another year and writing down your names for safe keeping in future.

What a Real Dragon Looks Like by Darryl Price

So whenever anyone sees a dragon they're usually showing themselves to you on purpose.
