

All the Young Angel Heads

by Darryl Price

I don't think you understand. A sad boy doesn't just die inside, slowly he becomes withdrawn from certain types of lovely youthful reasoning out loud, accustomed to feeling what is expected of him, just to be allowed to survive another boring day. The missing life goes on. You're allowed to get bored with being bored, the obvious self-inflicted wound. But sometimes we can't wait any longer. We don't know what we're waiting for. Boys are targeted everytime they must run or fly, which is almost always. You think you understand.

We were beautiful creatures. Unconditional love is there for all for you and yours, not me, and not for us. All things are speaking to you whether they can defend themselves against your sharp relentless onslaught or not. I don't think you understand. Boys will never leave you to suffer alone like the bastard men of means.

Things here are alive even if their green angel heads are not all the way up the elevator dream shaft to the sun, and the moon kingdom's revolving restaurant at the end of the next world is on fire. It doesn't need explaining. Boys send their love any way they can. It gets misunderstood pretty damned quickly. I don't think you understand. I'm Available online at «<http://fictionaut.com/stories/darryl-price/all-the-young-angel-heads>»

Copyright © 2018 Darryl Price. All rights reserved.

still waking up. Even now. Even here.
I don't think you understand. Strange hungry eyes are looking back at us from out of the joyless darkness. Boys grin and bear it, but each one of us will bring his fists to the final protection. It's what we do.

You may not understand. It's all for you.
Everything is love for you. There's nothing else. I don't think you understand. We promised.
It'll be over when we're asleep forever. dp .

Bonus poems:

Human Heartbeat by Darryl Price

It's the same words just different people.
I don't know or care how we got here. It doesn't matter. I don't believe we are made out of nothingness and dust over the terrible karmic rainbow again and again and again. But the heartache's real enough. It's the same words here being realized. You respond because you hear them in your own head and recognize the voice as yours. Who cares if we've been sent here before we are here now. It's the same words begging at the freezing door, or selling bent wounded flowers on the barren street. The same words dressed up to fit your guilt or compassion. It's the same words describing the blue sky as it passes above your eyes. I do my best to own it for them but you always insist on looking for right answers. It's the same words in the darkness as in the light. Suffering tends to put the blame somewhere else but we know it is on us. The same words haunt us. They secretly follow us home from work. They tap on the window with a dark tree branch. They rain hard on the leaking roof. But we learned a long time ago to use the human heartbeat to start a good conversation with the music-minded elementals surrounding us. Folks, it's another myth gone haywire. But it's the very same words drinking themselves silly.

It's the same words searching for some crumb of consolation I suppose. Words jingling, broken, soaking in a paper bag. Words left by the side of the road. Words rotting in the indifferent winds. Being born one more time for old time's sake. Words hoping. Some dreaming. But you've heard it all before. Words trying to get you to listen. Wanting you to touch them. Who knows what level of tenderness will do the magic trick? It's the same words once rejected by you when you were them. dp

Feelings by Darryl Price

You are the Earth's only hope with your faith in love's friendship with all beings everywhere.
You are the Earth's only hope standing in the rain. You are the Earth's only hope making music on your computer.

You are the Earth's only hope via email. The rest of us have already turned to flowers. Our shine is ringing out.

Soon the walls will clap no more for us.

You are the Earth's only hope for removing the wires put into our dreams. They can't stop you from making so much noise
,
but they'll try. You are the Earth's only hope for remembering that good feeling that comes from being free. You are the ones who love to dance. You are the Earth's only hope to wake again in the garden, to leave our statued shells behind.

Come on. Open the gate You are the keepers. Each one a piece reflecting one together.

You are the skies on quick fire. dp

Doorway with Bicycle by Darryl Price

My writing career cannot be fixed. It's already taken all of my time to the whole terrible beauty of another dimension. Already lured me down strange paths in the forest that I felt sure I knew how to return safely from. I'm still trying to get home. My writing has derailed every relationship that might have been good for me. I had to watch others get to that dream together without me. My writing career has walked away without me, has other grand plans. I'm always surprised by those who overlap their creative sides and their love for friends so successfully.

My friends were always us or it. That usually meant choosing a way to quietly present my love without it ever being truly acknowledged as having always chosen them. This leaves you with only one option, the broken heart.

The poems don't care. They want to live. They only want to see above the weeds, and above the clouds, above even the stars. There they explode, the ink runs into the gutters, dries. The heart remains a broken bottle. I think it might even be getting to me. But the poor choice is already a faded photograph.

A pooh bear with a broken arm. A box of old postcard souvenirs. My writing career is almost finished. I wanted to get it right this time. I close my eyes. I close my eyes. The last parts I'll paint by faith alone in to something that's probably not there--the voice at last showing its smiling teeth. Yeah I could really do with your smile right about now. You might not think it's all that much fun, I'm here to say it's always been everything. I can't help that now or ever again. My writing career became an animal of its own making. You know what happens when the tiger gets so hungry that he can't ever let it go.

This doorway is my portal into that summer of my bicycle and you. I've kept it hidden away all these years. But now my writing career can't use it any more. The sun here is a pinched pink dot on the corner of a colorless sky. I am still in my flannel pajamas. My writing is nothing if not persistent. My writing career, which wasn't much to begin with, looks out and sighs. dp

