The Four to Go Soon

by Darryl Price

I don't know. They say a lot of things that sound mostly like falling, clashing warnings to me. The silky sky's pantaloons can't always be ready to cave in on the priggish audience's head. Nothing ever sounds like real love from their mouths. I guess that's my main problem. I mean to say, you don't want to step on a sleeping rattlesnake just to get yourself some freely given wisdom, but common sense isn't always available to the moment's too late moment. Help should be an obvious flag, waving in a frantic wind, and not just the words to a pretty cool song. Trust me, you don't want to dance for a living, unless you can also rest and take care of your tired and sore feet like a ferocious mama bear. It's all a constant question of inner and outer balances. That's why I question their snap like a stepped on twig, plumet like a streaming bullet, fast approach to life. Not everything's out to kill you first. It just seems that way when you're fed a constant diet of only your worst, childhood fears and a grilled to perfection beefed-up hopelessness. Snack on this tasty bit of raw unbridled hate. Swig down some of this nasty bile awhile.

A crooked smile that says less about meeting and meaning joy and more about taking advantage of the situation whenever possible. There are unbrushed, bared teeth in the weirdest of all places on earth, I'll admit, but everything everywhere also seems to responds to a little love. Look at lost or mistreated dogs. Look at once beautiful, now overgrown, choking gardens. Look at empty and abandoned houses, empty of the Available online at «http://fictionaut.com/stories/darryl-price/the-four-to-go-soon» Copyright © 2026 Darryl Price. All rights reserved.

noise of any kind of daily chaos and still somehow happy living. Now think of those poor things as people.
If given the chance, what do you think would happen to them? You get what you give-- because physically you've already proven your philosophical point once it is made visible to the naked eye by any kind of truth in you. They can deny care all they want, but they can never really escape its strange familiarity, because it is their own eventual destiny, twisted or else set to straight.

To be or not to be. One thing or the other. Choose. Once a possibility exists in this world, it's very hard to put it back in the bottle again.
Bad guys are only interested in the possibility of more violence, but the good guys know there's a lot more to it than that. Oh, trust me, they are prepared to do whatever it takes to protect our world, but also their own decent hearts, from the golden greed of corruption of the spirit. The single line to sell your soul for easy money is always going to be many, many miles long 24 hours a day.

