

The World is Full

by Darryl Price

of birds. The world is full of snakes. The world is full of mushrooms. The world is full of flies. The world is full of bombs. Not so many trees. Not as many as you might think. The world is full of flowers. Not so many bees. The world is full of rocks. Some kids throw them. Others use them as the lawns they never had. The world is full of pudgy shadows. The world is full of revolution. But it doesn't matter. The world is full of hate. But all the world needs is love. You're in the world and I'm in the world. We both need some love. The world is full of frogs turning into raindrops. The world is love say the prophets. But the poets are cynical bastards. The world is full of pickpockets and thieves. The world is full of mutating germs. But also atoms that build houses and wild white water rivers and giant mountains. And stardust sprinkled in everywhere for good measure. The world is full of short term romances and long term loans. The world is full of incredibly beautiful pollution made sunsets. But as long as you're here I don't care who knows it. The world is buried in cars. Counting them all would be like counting stars. The world is full of unwanted rituals. The world is full of frozen statues of our childhoods. We can't afford to tear them down. But we must. We have to be free. The world is full of nobodies. Emily is forever their queen. John Lennon was the beloved murdered king. That was all so long ago now. But it still hurts, like it was yesterday. The world is full of strangers who are all just other human beings on the same journey--to match their souls with their bodies. Best graces.

The cosmic misalignment has caused a lot of harm over the centuries. The world is full of soda pop. But all the world needs is fresh water to drink. We both need clean water. The world is full of propagated doubt and fear. But we're the creators, the heavens sent us to fix things up.

Bonus poems:

Join Us This Week
by Darryl Price

But don't be foolish. We're not going to change anything. This is not only about being true to yourself. No one cares about your sonnets. Don't write them for me or anyone else. The sonnet has already been set in stone. Things are creeping into it now that it was always meant to keep out. You're going to have to find another way to stay alive for all time. But don't be foolish. All Sailors are lost to sea. It could be in a green bottle, that warped color of Spain in the sunshine. Her little fading red skirt. All that wasted time when you could have been happy. I'm the one being foolish here. This isn't about me, like I said. They don't know it's only you and me. We're not going to bring anything back. Don't you get it? (They're not listening.) Not to us and our love stories. They've got better things to do. This is about hitting the ground running. Nothing is going to change. Someone always wants to swallow the evil spirit trapped in a tree by the Avatar.

They believe it will make them invincible. Then there are tons of glass shards left scattered on the molten beaches and you have to be careful to watch out where you are stepping as you make your escape. But don't let us be foolish now. We are in it up to our elbows. The answer is no different now than it ever was. The weapons may look different, but there's only one.

The No Regret Gets Pummeled by Love's Sad Mirror
by Darryl Price

Can we leave before our dreams are taken? Kiss before he gets back with the milk? Fuck, why not? Before new storms wash us away from the only shelter of each other's courage. Before, shoveled on top of us, doubt breaks the camel's back with sagging regret, with its black whispering spears stuck into our heart's weary beltway? I don't want to have to never forget to remember you. Couldn't we just leave without knowing which way we are going, except for the sure embrace, beginning with each other's eyes?

I feel you now. I weep for you that this is going to be your life. The world will continue on its path of no gratitude and no love until it doesn't. I held the flag once. If you care they will take you for a frightening stranger, but the world needs you. Your music. The world needs flowers. It will never stop breaking your heart under the plow's dull indifferent grab.

I'm Just Not Interested
by Darryl Price

in making your sad blown apart hearts rise up and squeeze out the kindness juices ever so sweetly anymore. Tried that. Didn't work out too well, not for me, wasn't a BIG time of waste, but did eat up some important wee hours left to just simply be floating about in my garden with the greenest of nice faint folk at hand. I've come to the conclusion you should never do more than enjoy the true time just the way it is. Just grab a hungry lungful and an bashful eyefull and go about your own small business plan, which I suppose is to eventually leap over the garden walls and run like hell towards the unknown worlds. We kicked ourselves out. That's what we do the best. Let all the denizens stay exactly where they are—you'll meet more and plenty. Only a fool would look up at the stars and wonder why we are still here all alone. I've got to say I believe in something quite tangible, so why not this mental buzzing and inky pathway set down here before you? It's your own table spread before you as much as mine. It's as good as any cloud for containing a bunch of rainyday dreams to come, and who knows it may even divide and provide an incredible slide show for all the kiddies? Nah, I mean that's just way too cynical, even for me. You can have your monuments to fearful heavens. That's never worked out for me except to make me aware of the loveliness of bells, the sadness of angels, and the wretchedness of most people.

Why are all the corners of the logged in world full of little old ladies polishing everything into a slippery mess? The good old point, the point that can't be gotten to so easily because it lands where it lands, and that's a different throw each time you make it I'm afraid—no matter how good you are. That's why you don't aim. It's pointless. You just bring the two colliding world's heads together and bite deeply into the oncoming spark with all the gusto you can muster. What happens next? You are far-flung into a freefall, where you will either right yourself or feel like your arms are melting off on a runaway speed dial whip of wind. Your father cannot save you then from such a glorious height. Only you can save you. That's the lonely flare on your own skin cells you'll be remembering. It's telling you right now that another piece is either gone or coming back home again to complete your kit as you become your own journey.

You're it. People know all this one way or another.
They're not fooled by books. They just don't have the heart left for it half the time because they've already had their own hearts eaten away in chunks by invisible wolves. Amazing how much of a missing song title will return to you in the many sad days to come, if you truly want it to, but you have to wish for it with your whole life at stake or it simply won't speak up any louder than as a small whisper, refusing to self-manifest as more than a few quickly blown notes to the winds of time when you aren't looking directly at it. You will force yourself to live again on purpose. Rise up again on purpose. And again. And again. And again.

And again. And again. Until you have fulfilled the ultimate breathing at last to the sounding out of the life majestic living directly inside of you the whole time a note like no other and yet familiar. And now we come once more to yet another ending of one thing and the beginning of quite another for the both of us. You are going on from here to breach another shored up doorstep to the ultimate end zone, kill another day with kindness or not, mold another soft hour to your bidding, add another ice cream cone to the eternal breakdown of civilization, another beached whale tied to the bricked wall, another city smothering in its own churning filth, another voice above the blinding din of crashing metal monstrosities, another after another after another. You'll find yourself either roughly shoved up flat against the tallest glass around or slipped just slightly under it. Everything torn out or worn away or simply gone to make the road stretching so far in front of you that you can't imagine where it ever stops, how you'll even get there from here, but there it is, and here you are, like always.

Bark Bark Bark (Flying Portuguese)
by Darryl Price

The one thing you could do for him to make him feel better about being crucified every day of his life, you won't. Instead you wait for the stranger and give it to him. Bark bark bark. You don't have to know something to know nothing.
Bark bark bark. Duck foot pattern. You know this makes you smile. Why lie? Bark bark bark. Wish there was an easier way to tell you I'm still in love with you, as you talk on the phone, as you roll down the window, as you drive away, smiling and laughing with your best friend. I suppose you've tossed me a kind of absence. The road looks like a meaningless old monologue now. The parking lot looks corrupt and sad sacked, as tossed aside as a cardboard mask dropped on the forgotten grass after some major fireworks display. Bark bark bark. The new world is coming to another end. Bark bark bark. Hope you can hear me. I've got nothing to say. Again. Bark bark bark. Who knows? Bark bark bark. I don't desire only to make myself useful.

I am no apologetic monk sitting on a roof waiting for the gift of grace. You've either got it or you don't. Bark bark bark.

And of course you do. Look in a mirrored surface. Listen to the image. Bark bark bark. One of us is still thinking. Bark bark bark. This is the only way I know how to reach you through a million grains of sand. Bark bark bark. Remember to forget me. Bark bark bark. You scared? Me, too. Bark bark bark. I guess you're entitled. But why are we under heaven? The earth is a little rock. Does that make us all little rocks, too? Bark bark bark. None of that is what I wanted to say. Say. Hum me another love tune. Bark bark bark. Why does everywhere have to be so lonesome? Bark bark bark. The moon is a dime found in the dryer with the missing sock. Bark bark bark. They're all thinking about something else. Bark bark bark.

Look the word up. Look all the words up. Tell them to all go jump in the lake. But do it in a new way. Bark bark bark. Listen. Let's both take it easy here now. Let the darling clutch out slowly. Slowly.

Save your goodbyes. Bark bark bark. It's almost beyond recognition.
Bark bark bark. Bark bark bark. Bark bark bark. Bark bark bark. Bark bark bark. Bark
bark bark. Bark bark bark. Bark bark bark.

