Whip Poor Will

by David Ackley

Save your delirium scrabbling at the glass your darkness coiled hissing in its corner for corpse orations staked in the heart of verbs sun unsheathed

the blistering,

the seething streets Poor Will, whipped in this siege and seethe of silence.