

Nineteen in '72

by Derek Osborne

Sea-Bright Jersey midnight ocean bodies running mascara salting my cellist fingers finding your note the small of your back l'Arc de Triomphe

Do you remember that summer solstice far far away from the madding crowded envious bar in that cloud-stained joint high school undertow tugging shadows

A name never asked but what's in a name more sweet girl than either imagined memory epiphany joy and regret to be so young once more in your eyes Something unspoken some thing not offered but given taken not given withheld too soon we surrendered shining immortals these days these winters I cuddle your light

