prima vera

by Dorothee Lang

lemon dripping from trees in forgotten yards fenced with rusted wire with red flowers pink porcelain properties waiting for new lords to turn the crystal glass the metal gate in the nook of the road shatters of a wind shield next to a stone pillar next to an olive tree fields of grass bended by blows of Spanish winds they refuse to tell the tale