Food for Thought

by Emily Sparkles

I could never be a chef. Preparing creations that will merely be consumed.

If I were a chef, I'd have to create dishes that required chewing and chewing and chewing.

I'd find it better for my dishes to be destroyed in the mouth. Remembered for their difficulty, even their unpleasantness, than easily swallowed.

Digested without effort. Forgotten as shit.