

ABSALOM

by Eric Boyd

He was still on the ground in the morning. His jaw hurt.

They were both gone; he was alone. He'd never been so proud of his son, though.

