Birds of a Feather

by Gary Hardaway

The grackles squawk and peck at one another in a fight for the fattest cricket among the several that hop across the tire-stained pavement.

Contention over market share is bred in them and we are cousins in the chromosome for fluffed and strutting dispute.