Confinement

by Gary Hardaway

Language enables and ensnares. Even mathematics, for all its assumed purity and fidelity to the underlying structure of the cosmos, would be indecipherable written in a truly alien hand, the numbers not Arabic or Roman, the symbols a complete mystery.

Even music relies on what you know as music for its power to enthrall. Our grammars support our hearing of one another but obscure the truth we aren't prepared to understand. Our words are lovely things that nonetheless imprison us.
