Flurry

by Gary Hardaway

I am amazed to be amazed again by falling snow. I thought that I had lost the cleansing power of delight. But here it is- exhilarating joy that falls across me as I watch the snowflakes fall.

If I had slept a little longer, I would not have seen this rarity at all. The glaze on windshields, paving, and the trees would be but rain or drizzle in my mind and not the white phenomenon I watch.