

Last Poem

by Gary Hardaway

At some point in the locus of points it will be true. When the heart stops

caring enough to squeeze pallid blood through

or the voice that wants to be inscribed
forgets the sounds

the vowels make or the shapes
of the consonants.

Some one
must be the last.
Why not this one?

