Life as a Porno

by Gary Hardaway

Thump thump and astringent chords imitate the worst of late 1970's rock. It's early morning sports and macho ads with websites and 1-800 numbers intersperse the feats of downhill skiers competing for an unknown prize. It could as well be late night infomercials saturating the screen with medieval looking exercise machines guaranteed to render abs rippled as shiny washboards or passive, weight dissolving supplements that swim the murky waters just beyond the safety net spread by the FDA. Everything in the off-hour world amazes and dilates the capillaries. A small release repeats itself across the land as Visa numbers spasm through the internet and spawn an oily afterglow of anxious shame.
