Novembering

by Gary Hardaway

Metal halide lamps ignite and smolder early now as we fall back.

White below the gray, Canadian geese fly north again, confused.

Tied and jacketed composure yields to sudden, sharp, November wind.

Cinnamon and smoke infuse the days that shorten, chill, accelerate.

Brittle, gold and blown, the offspring of the elm tree swirl along the street.

Fragrant herbs and bird incite the appetite of grateful kith and kin.

Multicolored light illuminates the plumb and pitch of eave and ridge.
