Of the FTC and the Human Condition

by Gary Hardaway

Humanity comes without a choice of muted or saturated color, without an owner's manual, without a warranty, express or implied. The condition is untenable.

It is a consumer's nightmare, an existential burden in soft skin with even softer innards. And all examples end in death. Where's the fairness in that?

My complaint falls on soft, defective ears.