

Optical Delusion

by Gary Hardaway

Veiled by tenuous clouds and dirty air, the sun this early morning can be looked at straight on, its pale yellow disk expanded by the lens of atmosphere.

One imagines it close and cool enough to swallow, a glowing holy host of summer.

