

Politicouscous II

by Gary Hardaway

Charlie Krauthammer

He looks, on Fox,
like something once
embalmed and buried resurrected as an entertainment- grotesque caricature of the human.
Re-inter that rotted corpse.

Field Test for the Class War

“It'll take any finish clean off.”
He saturated the red cotton cloth and rubbed the Obsidian Black Metallic down to steely gray base metal in an arched brow just above the left headlight then balanced it out above the right headlight.
The shiny SLK looked surprised.
“See? Gone. Graffiti of erasure.”

Same Shit, Different Era

In which era was it not a scary world?
Last century, the perils were both red and yellow after Jerry was undone. Now, they're brown and cross, without respect, the Rio Grande and, further west, less visible arid boundaries.
None propose a fence across the north. I daresay it's Canucks that steal the best new jobs.

Of course, we have the yellow peril still, inscrutable new wave capitalists mucking up the flow of cash and trinkets, picking up the slack from chastened Tokyo.
The red that's most declaimed today is mostly ink though, damn, that dark-skinned POTUS looks a little pinkish when the light shines from the right

Philanthropy

Please, don't add another wing to the DMA or seed-fund a public park as a young son's namesake. Build a non-predatory grocery store where working poor can catch a break from bleached pork and chicken with an altered expiration date.
Build a widget works in Youngstown or Waxahachie. Do what you claim to have done amassing the wealth it takes to add a breast cancer pavilion to Presbyterian and take a real risk of only breaking even where forsaken siblings loiter, stunned and stoned.

Accelerate Extinction

Vote for Mitt
and let them just get on with it -
the short last chapter
in the horrifying

Book of Man.
Drill baby drill
so we can burn baby burn
and taste Atlantic salt silent on a hill
near Nashville.
They have a plan
and he's their man
with head and breast
of ready clay
easy to mold
whichever way
the Kochs and Roves might say is best.
