Self Portrait Without Colors

by Gary Hardaway

I have become my small routines and temperate enthusiasms. The days of my work week are indistinguishable. Saturdays are the bank, the liquor store, and groceries; Sundays are gasoline and cigarettes, Half Price Books, and sportscasts. I am the ritual banalities of days numbered, numberless, and numb.