

Starlight Standup

by Gary Hardaway

The clouds have broken. Stars and galaxies bright enough shine through smaze and glare of luminaires that light the streets and shopping center parking lots.
They wink at me as if to share a cosmic joke whose punch line's still a couple dozen light years out which, when it comes, is killer.

