Testament Part 2 of 6

by Gary Hardaway

The cunning take the thread of fact and weave a tapestry that lies to their advantage. From the faceted complexity of Canossis comes a labyrinth. From our ceremony of respect for mindless force we can't control but only evade with grace and knowledge, a monster in the labyrinth. From a king-chosen, not born, nor thrust upon a race by murderous alliances-- a cruel tyrant delighting in the suffering of others. As we, weakened-- beloved faces reduced by death to less than half-- were forced to hear, recounted by the scarred and angry Mycenaeans.

One must learn to give the Bull the things it needs: space, grass and grain, his mates and offspring, and elude the things its momentary fury wants- your death and those of your sisters and brothers. One must sadly learn to treat the lion with similar evasive regard. But our diplomacy, once revered along all shores of the Sea, collapsed and died, rebuked.
