The balloon of you

by Gary Hardaway

is filled at the start with something lighter than air-perhaps a mix of spirit, ether, and time-and, buoyant, lifts above the gravitied ground to float and move with the wind-- but all balloons have porous skins and spirit, ether and time leak out, imperceptibly (unless thorns burst you open), and the mass exceeds the buoyancy and gravity pulls you back, slowly, to the dust ball that made you.