

The Light After Equinox

by Gary Hardaway

Soon enough, October's ragged lawn will hide its deficiencies under withered leaves of oak, pecan, and elm. A first freeze is still a month away here and any surprise of snow another one or two past leaf fall.

Moderating winds push away the summer's heat and desiccation. The sun's light is softer hued now. A faint russet modulates the stark, hot white to something kinder to the wrinkled gray of head and hands.
