

Tuesday

by Gary Hardaway

In hushed tones, we speak the unspeakable:
his one son, his only child,
dead suddenly at seventeen.

Only last Friday, he was introduced around, smiling, healthy,
a fine young man.

The family loved guns.
He could strip and clean the rifle in minutes.
A closed casket service, Friday at two.

