Tuesday

by Gary Hardaway

In hushed tones, we speak the unspeakable: his one son, his only child, dead suddenly at seventeen.

Only last Friday, he was introduced around, smiling, healthy, a fine young man.

The family loved guns. He could strip and clean the rifle in minutes. A closed casket service, Friday at two.