Weight

by Gary Hardaway

We danced. In my dreams, I can dance.

We flew. In my dreams, I can fly.

Our bodies swirled and intertwined

above the rooftops. In my dreams, I can love.

I wake, once again at rest,

too stolid and solid to dance or fly,

pinned again by the weight of waking up.