

Where is Now and When is There?

by Gary Hardaway

Before this century, the greatest spoil of war was history-- power over its edits, its framing, its point of view. History now becomes so ductile it devolves to memes and marketing, to ads and press releases. Dissembling, as before, is everything, but faster, cheaper, easier today.

The floor dissolves beneath us, pierced by lasered glare of countless eye-beams. Truth, like velocity, is always relative, only understood in relation to defined but always arbitrary points in time and space.

We stand now where we choose, in this perpetual war.
