

Poleward

by George LaCas

After the eviction notice, my wife and I packed our belongings in backpacks and black plastic bags. We hit the road, headed west.

“Where are we going?” she asked, smoking.

When we neared the Texas line I hung a hard right. Another back road to avoid old warrants.

“Canada.”

Dreams of mountains, snow, air. Freedom.

