

Death, looking over the poet's shoulder, whispers...

by James Lloyd Davis

You type the words'n'the words sing
But you
Will not outlive them
 Adrift like logs that will not sink
But you
Will never hear them
 As they tumble from the lips
Of loving strangers

