

Moon Over L.A.

by Jerry Ratch

The moon begins to rise over L.A. while the roaches try to crawl up the sides of the mountains surrounding the L.A. Basin.

While fires rage in the forests of the night, here comes the moon over the horizon, big and haunted, pock-marked and cool in its flames, as earthquakes rattle the windows in their panes, and ultimately everything and everyone sighs a big sigh of relief under the sober and sad drawn-on clown white face of the moon that has repeatedly misunderstood its own meaning and significance, after revealing our history, after revealing the rosy sides and internal musings of the roaches who are even this minute inching their way up from inside the earth.

